Robert Linggi v The Government of Malaysia

HIGH COURT (KOTA KINABALU) — CIVIL SUIT NO K21–07 OF 2009
DAVID WONG J
15 MARCH 2011

Civil Procedure — Locus standi — Correct approach in determining locus standi in constitutional challenge cases — Whether plaintiff lacked locus standi when his rights had not been affected by defendant

Constitutional Law — Constitution — Alleged breach of Federal Constitution by Legislature — Whether concurrence of respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak was required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) when art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution ('Constitution') were amended — Whether setting up of Judicial Appointment Commission under Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 unconstitutional and thus null and void — Supplementary judgment — Whether consent of respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri were required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Constitution when art 121(1) of the Constitution was amended in 1988

Words and Phrases — Meaning of 'operation' and 'constitution' in art 161E(2) of the Federal Constitution

The plaintiff, a Sabahan, instituted this case to safeguard what he perceived as a breach of the Federal Constitution ('Constitution') by the legislature. He sought, inter alia, declarations that the removal of the power of appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri and the setting up of the Judicial Appointment Commission under the Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 ('the JAC Act') were unconstitutional and thus null and void. Article 161E(2)(b) of the Constitution prohibits amendments to the Constitution without the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri 'if such amendment is such as to effect the operation of the Constitution as regards the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak'. It was the plaintiff's case that the amendment made by way of the Constitution (Amendment) Act 1994 ('the 1994 Amendment'), which incorporated a new art 122AB to the Constitution and which was made without the concurrence of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri, was unconstitutional and invalid because it had not complied with art 161E(2) of the Constitution. Prior to the amendment, judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak were appointed by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri acting on the advice of the Chief Justice of High Court of Sabah and Sarawak but under new art 122AB the power of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri to appoint judicial commissioners was taken away. In response the defendant submitted that the consents of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak were not required, as the 1994 amendment did not affect the operation of the Constitution as regards the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak. It was also the plaintiff's case that the JAC Act which amended the manner in which judges were appointed to the courts in Malaysia contravened art 161E of the Constitution insofar as it did not have the consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak. The plaintiff thus contended that the JAC Act was unconstitutional and hence null and void. The defendant raised the issue that the plaintiff lacked the locus standi to come to this court for relief when there was no controversy between him and the defendant whereby his rights had been affected. The plaintiff contended that in public law he had the locus standi to challenge legislations made in contravention to the Constitution. These were the issues considered in the main judgment made on 14 March 2011. The issue as to whether the consents of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri were required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Constitution when art 121(1) of the Constitution was amended in 1988 was the subject of the supplementary judgment made on 15 March 2011.

Held, dismissing the plaintiff's claim with no order as to costs:

(1) The Constitution is the supreme law of the country and is a document which belongs to all Malaysians. As such, it must logically follow that all Malaysians had an entrenched right to litigate their grievance in court when there was a perceived breach of the Constitution by the Legislature. The plaintiff was genuinely concerned with the erosion of the constitutional rights of Sabah in respect of the appointment, removal and suspension of judges of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak and sought to attempt to uphold the Constitution. Thus he had the locus standi to bring this action (see paras 6 & 11).

(2) The 1994 amendment had affected the 'operation' of the Constitution as it had removed the power of appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri. As the word 'constitution' referred to the existence or 'make up or structure' of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak, which involved the judicial officers presiding in the courts of Sabah and Sarawak, a judicial commissioner being a judicial officer of the court constituted part of the structure of the court. Hence when the 1994 amendment was introduced without the consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah or Sarawak it contravened art 161E(2)(b) of the Constitution. Accordingly art 122AB of the Constitution was null and void in so far as it concerned the removal of the power to appoint judicial commissioners by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak (see paras 18–19 & 26).

(3) Through the JAC Act, a Judicial Appointments Commission ('the Commission') was established mainly to make recommendations to the Prime Minister ('PM') on the candidates to be appointed as judicial commissioners or judges and their promotions and thus merely provided a process in which candidates for judgeship were vetted by the Commission. Since the Constitution did not provide any process in which the credentials of the candidates for judgeship were to be discussed before they were presented to the PM for consideration, it was clear that the JAC Act which attempted to rectify those shortfalls was a welcome piece of legislation. Further, after reading the relevant provisions of the JAC Act it was clear that it was the function of the Commission to only recommend qualified candidates for judgeship to the PM and that the PM's discretion is completely untouched as provided in art 122AB and 122B of the Constitution (see paras 27 & 38–40).

(4) However, s 37 of the JAC Act which gives the PM the power to amend any provisions of the JAC Act by way of a Gazette contravenes the Constitution. This was because any amendment to the JAC Act or any piece of legislation was an exercise of legislative power and under the doctrine of separation of powers only Parliament could make or amend laws. Thus it was found that s 37 of the JAC Act was null and void. In any case this finding was now academic, since the provision was only effective for two years ie until 9 February 2011 (see para 45).

(5) The plaintiff submitted that if proof of the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak were shown to the court he would not pursue the issue as to whether the consents of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri were required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Constitution when art 121(1) of the Constitution was amended in 1988. As the defendant had shown such proof the plaintiff's claim that art 121(1) of the Constitution is unconstitutional was also dismissed (see paras 48–50).

[Bahasa Malaysia summary

Plaintif, orang Sabah, memulakan kes ini untuk melindungi apa yang dianggapnya sebagai pelanggaran Perlembagaan Persekutuan ('Perlembagaan') oleh badan perundangan. Dia memohon, antara lain, deklarasi-deklarasi bahawa pelucutan kuasa pelantikan pesuruhjaya kehakiman bagi Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak oleh Yang di-Pertua Negeri masing-masing dan penubuhan Suruhanjaya Pelantikan Kehakiman di bawah Akta Suruhanjaya Pelantikan Kehakiman 2009 ('Akta SPK') adalah tidak berperlembagaan dan oleh itu batal dan tidak sah. Perkara 161E(2)(b) Perlembagaan melarang pindaan-pindaan kepada Perlembagaan tanpa kebenaran Yang di-Pertua

Negeri masing-masing 'if such amendment is such as to effect the operation of the Constitution as regards the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak'. Adalah menjadi kes plaintif bahawa pindaan yang dibuat melalui Akta Perlembagaan (Pindaan) 1994 ('Pindaan 1994'), yang mana menggabungkan perkara 122AB yang baru kepada Perlembagaan dan yang telah dibuat tanpa persetujuan daripada Yang di-Pertua Negeri masing-masing, adalah tidak berperlembagaan dan tidak sah kerana tidak mematuhi perkara 161E(2) Perlembagaan. Sebelum pindaan tersebut, pesuruhjaya kehakiman bagi Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak dilantik oleh Yang di-Pertua Negeri masing-masing yang bertindak berdasarkan nasihat Ketua Hakim Negara bagi Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak tetapi di bawah perkara 122AB baru tersebut, kuasa Yang di-Pertua Negeri untuk melantik pesuruhjaya kehakiman telah dilucutkan. Sebagai balasan, defendan berhujah bahawa kebenaran-kebenaran Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak masing-masing adalah tidak perlu, memandangkan Pindaan 1994 tidak memberi kesan kepada pelaksanaan Perlembagaan berhubung dengan perlembagaan dan bidang kuasa Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak. Adalah menjadi kes plaintif juga bahawa Akta SPK yang mana meminda cara perlantikan hakim-hakim ke mahkamah di Malaysia melanggar perkara 161E Perlembagaan setakat ia tidak mengandungi kebenaran oleh Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak. Justeru, plaintif mendakwa bahawa Akta SPK tidak berpelembagaan dan oleh itu adalah batal dan tidak sah. Defendan membangkitkan isu bahawa plaintif tidak mempunyai locus standi untuk datang ke mahkamah bagi relief apabila tiada kontroversi di antara dia dan defendan di mana hak-haknya telah terjejas. Plaintif berhujah bahawa di dalam undang-undang awam, dia mempunyai locus standi untuk mencabar penggubalan undang-undang yang bercanggah dengan Perlembagaan. Ini merupakan isu-isu yang dipertimbangkan di dalam penghakiman utama yang dijalankan pada 14 Mac 2011. Isu sama ada kebenaran-kebenaran Yang di-Pertua Negeri masing-masing diperlukan menurut perkara 161E(2)(b) Perlembagaan apabila perkara 121(1) Perlembagaan telah dipinda pada 1988 adalah subjek bagi penghakiman tambahan yang dijalankan pada 15 Mac 2011.

Diputuskan, menolak tuntutan plaintif tanpa perintah untuk kos:

(1) Perlembagaan merupakan undang-undang tertinggi negara dan dokumen yang menjadi milik kesemua rakyat Malaysia. Maka secara logiknya, semua rakyat Malaysia mempunyai hak kukuh untuk melitigasi kilanan mereka di dalam mahkamah apabila dianggap bahawa terdapat pelanggaran Perlembagaan oleh badan perundangan. Plaintif benar-benar mengambil berat tentang kehilangan hak-hak perlembagaan Sabah berkaitan dengan pelantikan, pelucutan dan penggantungan hakim-hakim Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak dan telah memohon sebagai cubaan untuk mempertahankan Perlembagaan. Justeru, dia mempunyai locus standi untuk membawa tindakan ini (lihat perenggan 6 & 11).

(2) Pindaan 1994 telah menjejaskan 'pelaksanaan' Perlembagaan memandangkan ia telah melucutkan kuasa pelantikan pesuruhjaya kehakiman bagi Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak oleh Yang di-Pertua Negeri masing-masing. Memandangkan perkataan 'constitution' merujuk kepada kewujudan atau 'make up or structure' Mahkamah Tinggi Sabah dan Sarawak, yang melibatkan pegawai-pegawai kehakiman yang bersidang di dalam mahkamah-mahkamah di Sabah dan Sarawak, seorang pesuruhjaya kehakiman sebagai pegawai kehakiman bagi mahkamah membentuk sebahagian daripada struktur mahkamah. Oleh demikian, apabila Pindaan 1994 telah diperkenalkan tanpa kebenaran Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak, ia telah bercanggah dengan perkara 161E(2)(b) Perlembagaan. Dengan itu, perkara 122AB Perlembagaan adalah batal dan tidak sah setakat mana ia melibatkan pelucutan kuasa untuk melantik pesuruhjaya kehakiman oleh Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak masing-masing (lihat perenggan 18–19 & 26).

(3) Melalui Akta SPK, Suruhanjaya Pelantikan Kehakiman ('Suruhanjaya') telah ditubuhkan untuk membuat cadangan kepada Perdana Menteri ('PM') tentang calon-calon untuk dilantik sebagai pesuruhjaya kehakiman atau hakim-hakim dan kenaikan pangkat mereka dan sekadar memperuntukkan proses di mana calon-calon bagi kehakiman disemak oleh Suruhanjaya. Memandangkan Perlembagaan tidak memperuntukkan sebarang proses di mana kelayakan calon-calon untuk kehakiman dibincangkan sebelum mereka diperkenalkan kepada PM untuk pertimbangan, adalah jelas bahawa Akta SPK yang mana cuba untuk membaiki kekurangan tersebut merupakan undang-undang yang dialu-alukan. Tambahan, setelah membaca peruntukan Akta SPK yang relevan, jelas bahawa adalah menjadi fungsi Suruhanjaya tersebut untuk hanya mencadangkan calon-calon yang berkelayakan untuk kehakiman kepada PM dan bahawa budi bicara PM langsung tidak disentuh seperti yang diperuntukkan di dalam perkara 122AB dan 122B Perlembagaan (lihat perenggan 27 & 38–40).

(4) Walau bagaimanapun, s 37 Akta SPK yang mana memberikan PM kuasa untuk meminda apa-apa peruntukan Akta SPK melalui warta adalah bercanggah dengan Perlembagaan. Ini adalah kerana sebarang pindaan terhadap Akta SPK atau mana-mana undang-undang adalah pelaksanaan kuasa penggubalan dan di bawah doktrin pengasingan kuasa, hanya Parlimen boleh membuat atau meminda undang-undang. Oleh itu, adalah didapati bahawa s 37 Akta SPK batal dan tidak sah. Dalam mana-mana kes, dapatan ini kini bersifat akademik, memandangkan peruntukan tersebut hanya akan berkuat kuasa untuk dua tahun iaitu sehingga 9 Februari 2011 (lihat perenggan 45).

(5) Plaintif berhujah bahawa jika pembuktian tentang kebenaran Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak dapat ditunjukkan kepada mahkamah, dia tidak akan meneruskan isu tentang sama ada kebenaran-kebenaran Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah dan Sarawak masing-masing diperlukan menurut perkara 161E(2)(b) Perlembagaan apabila perkara 121(1) Perlembagaan telah dipinda pada 1998. Memandangkan defendan telah menunjukkan pembuktian tersebut, tuntutan plaintif bahawa perkara 121(1) Perlembagaan adalah tidak berperlembagaan juga ditolak (lihat perenggan 48–50).]

PROCEEDINGS

[1] The plaintiff comes to court to seek the following declarations:

(a) that the removal of judicial power from the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak by virtue of the amendment to art 121 of the Federal Constitution is null and void;

(b) that the removal of the power of appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak by the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of both Sabah and Sarawak by is null and void; and

(c) that the setting up of the Judicial Appointment Commission ('JAC') under the Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 is unconstitutional and hence null and void.

ISSUES

[2] During the case management stage, on 12 October 2010, parties agreed to the facts set out in encl 31 and the following issues to be tried under O 14A of the Rules of the High Court 1980:

(a) whether the plaintiff has the locus standi to bring this suit;

(b) whether the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak is required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when art 121(1) of the Federal Constitution was amended with effect from 10 June 1988;

(c) whether the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak is required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution was amended and art 122AB of the same was inserted with effect from 24 June 1994; and

(d) whether the enactment of the Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 (Act 695) which came into force on 2 February 2009 is unconstitutional, null and void on the grounds that:

(i) it departs from the constitutional procedure and mode of appointment of judicial commissioners and judges set out in arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution and in effect it would be the substitute for the present consultative process between the Prime Minister and the individual judges under the said articles;

(ii) it is in effect an amendment of arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution and enacted in contravention of art 159(3) of the Federal Constitution;

(iii) there was no concurrences of the YDPN of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution; and

(iv) s 37 of Act 695 was enacted in contravention of art 44 of the Federal Constitution.

DELIBERATION OF ISSUES AND FINDINGS OF THE COURT

Issue 1

Whether the plaintiff has the locus standi to bring this suit?

[3] The plaintiff hails from the interior town of Keningau, Sabah and is a Malaysian citizen of Sabah origin or what is known colloquially in this country as a Sabahan. He comes to this court to safeguard what he perceives as breaches of the constitutional positions entrenched in respect of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak under art 161E(2)(b) which states as follows:

(2) No amendment shall be made to the Constitution without the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of the State of Sabah and Sarawak or each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak concerned, if the amendment is such as to affect the operation of the Constitution as regards any of the following matters:

(b) the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak and the appointment, removal and suspension of judges of that court; …

[4] Counsel for the defendant refers the court to the case of Boyce v Paddington Borough Council [1903] 1 Ch 109 at p 114 where Buckley J laid down the test for 'locus standi' of a litigant in a public litigation:

A plaintiff can sue without joining the attorney general in two cases: first where the interference with the public right is such as that some private right of his at the same time interfered with (eg where an obstruction is so placed in a highway that the owner of premises abutting upon the highway is specially affected by reason that the obstruction interferes with his private right of access from and to his premises to and

A from the highway); and, secondly, where no private right is interfered with but the plaintiff in respect of his public right suffers special damage peculiar to himself from the interference with the public right.

B [5] The case of Rickards v The Medical Benefits Fund of Australia Ltd (unreported, 18 April 1975) (referred to in Declaratory Orders (2nd Ed) PW Young QC) was also referred to and in that case Bowen CJ held that where a plaintiff seeks a declaration involving the validity of an act of Parliament, the court should be slow in granting such declaration unless the real interest of the parties before it will be decided by doing so and the giving of the declaration C will effectively deal with the matters in controversy between them. Applying the test, counsel submits that the plaintiff lacks 'locus standi' to come to this court for reliefs as there is no controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant as his rights have not been affected.

D [6] With respect to counsel for the defendant, to adopt her contention would be taking a retro step in the law on 'locus standi' in public law especially when there is a challenge to legislations made in contravention to the Federal Constitution. The Federal Constitution is the supreme law of the country and was drafted by the founding fathers of the country after taking into E consideration the interests of all relevant parties prior to the formation of Malaysia. It is a document which belongs to all Malaysian irrespective of their race and standing in society and starting from that base, it must logically follow that all Malaysian have an entrenched right to litigate their grievance in court whenever there is a perceived breach of the Federal Constitution by the F Legislature. In the local jurisdiction, suffice for me to refer to two judiciary pronouncements in the person of Suffian LP and Abdoolcader J. The former Lord President in Ah Thian v Government of Malaysia [1976] 2 MLJ 112 states as follows:

G The doctrine of the supremacy of Parliament does not apply in Malaysia. Here we have a written constitution. The power of Parliament and of State Legislatures in Malaysia is limited by the Constitution, and they cannot make any law they please.

Under our Constitution written law may be invalid on one of these grounds:

H (1) in the case of federal written law, because it relates to a matter with respect to which Parliament has no power to make law, and in the case of state written law, because it relates to a matter which respect to which the State Legislature has no power to make law, art 74; or

(2) in the case of both federal and state written law, because it is inconsistent with I the Constitution, see art 4(1); or

(3) in the case of state written law, because it is inconsistent with Federal law, art 75.

The court has power to declare any federal or state law invalid on any of the above three grounds.

> The court's power to declare any law invalid on grounds (2) and (3) is not subject to any restrictions, and may be exercised by any court in the land and in any proceeding whether it be started by government or by an individual.

[7] The Lord President's pronouncement that the Federal Constitution as the supreme law of the country is premised on art 4(1) of the Federal Constitution which states as follows:

> This Constitution is the supreme law of the Federation and any law passed after Merdeka Day which is inconsistent with this Constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void.

[8] In Government of Malaysia v Lim Kit Siang [1988] 2 MLJ 12 Abdoolcader J at p 45 states as follows:

> In Finlay v Minister of Finance of Canada the Federal Court of Appeal of Canada allowed a citizen who was neither directly affected nor a taxpayer to challenge the validity of federal and provincial transfer of payments under the Canada Assistance Plan. The decision has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada subnominee Finlay v Canada. The Supreme Court decided that the interest of the applicant was too remote or speculative to grant standing under the general requirement that the plaintiff must have a sufficient private or personal interest in the subject matter. The court went on to hold, however, that in appropriate public law cases, as a matter of judicial discretion, standing might be given to a private individual notwithstanding the fact that a constitutional or Charter of Rights and Freedoms issue was not involved. The court thus extended that principle laid down in Thorson v Attorney-General for Canada, Nova Scotia Board of Censors v McNeil (both of which I dealt with in Lim Cho Hock) and Minister of Justice for Canada v Borowski — all three of which involved the requirements for standing in a constitutional case where a party has no direct interest — to the field of administrative law and, in the result, granted standing to Finlay to bring action for a declaration to challenge the legality of the federal cost sharing arrangements.

[9] Counsel for the plaintiff had also referred to a case of the Tanzanian High Court which in my view is the correct approach in determining the plaintiff's locus standing in constitutional challenge cases. That case is Rev Christopher Mtikila v The Attorney-General Civil Case No 5 of 1993, High Court of Tanzania, where it held that:

> The notion of personal interest, personal injury or sufficient interest over and above the interest of the general public has more to do with private law as distinct from public law. In matters of public interest litigation this court will not deny standing to a genuine and bona fide litigant even where he has no personal interest in the matter … Given all these and other circumstances, if there should spring up a public-spirited individual and seek the court's intervention against legislation or actions that pervert the Constitution, the court, as guardian and trustee of the

A Constitution and what it stands for, is under an obligation to rise up to the occasion and grant him standing. The present petitioner is such an individual.

[10] Another case that is worth mentioning is a decision by the Supreme Court of Ireland in The Society for the Protection of unborn children (Ireland) Limited v Diarmund Coogan & Ors, defendants [1988] IR 734; (1988 No 7714P). The Supreme Court shared the same sentiment as the Tanzanian High Court, where the court in its judgment held that:

> Every member of the public has an interest in seeing that the fundamental law of the state is not defeated, and although the courts are the ultimate guardian of the Constitution, such protection is possible only where their powers are invoked. Since breaches of constitutional rights may on occasion be threatened by the government itself or its agents, it would be intolerable if access to the courts to defend and vindicate such constitutional rights were confined to the attorney general as the very officer of state instructed to defend the government's position.

[11] The plaintiff, as a Sabahan, in my view is genuinely concerned with the erosion of the rights of Sabah in so far as 'the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak and the appointment, removal and suspension of judges of that court' and since it concerns an attempt to uphold the Federal Constitution, I have no hesitation in finding that the plaintiff has the 'locus standi' to bring this action. I am fully aware of the argument that this may encourage litigation but in my view when there is a challenge concerning any dismantling of the supreme law of the country, litigation should be encouraged. In any event, all Malaysians have a duty to protect our constitution.

Issue 2

Whether the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak is required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when art 121(1) of the Federal Constitution was amended with effect from 10 June 1988

[12] This issue is put on abeyance pending production by counsel for the defendant of the original consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri Sabah, hence not necessary for me to deal with it now.

Issue 3

Whether the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak is required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution was amended and art 122AB of the same was inserted with effect from 24 June 1994

[13] For this issue, it is not disputed by counsel for the defendant that no consent has been obtained from the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak. However it is her contention that no such consent is required on grounds which I shall allude to later.

[14] This issue concerns the appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak. Prior to the amendments to art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution on 24 June 1994, the appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak may be appointed by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri acting on the advice of the Chief Justice (now known as Chief Judge) of High Court of Sabah and Sarawak. The then art 122A(3) and (4) read as follows:

> (3) For the dispatch of business of the High Court in Borneo in an area in which a judge of the Court is not for the time being available to attend to business of the Court, the Yang di-Pertuan Agong acting on the advice of the Lord President of the Federal Court, or for an area in either State the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of the State acting on the advice of the Chief Justice of the Court, may by order appoint to be judicial commissioner in that area for such period or for such purposes as may be specified in the order an advocate or person professionally qualified to be admitted an advocates of the Court.
> (4) Subject to any limitations or conditions imposed by the order appointing him, a judicial commissioner shall have the power, in the area for which he is appointed, to perform such functions of a judge of the High Court in Borneo as appear to him to require to be performed without delay; and anything done by a judicial commissioner when acting in accordance with his appointment shall have the same validity and effect as if done by a judge of that Court, and in respect thereof he shall have the same powers and enjoy the same immunities as if he had been a judge of that Court.

[15] What happened after 24 June 1994 is that the power of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak to appoint judicial commissioners has been taken away by the Constitution (Amendment) Act 1994 ('1994 Amendments') which incorporated a new art 122AB which reads as follows:

(1) For the dispatch of business of the High Court of Malaya and the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak, the Yang di-Pertuan Agong acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, after consulting the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, may by order appoint to be judicial commissioner for such period or such purposes as may be specified in the order any person qualified for appointment as a judge of a High Court; and the person so appointed shall have power to perform such functions of a judge of the High Court as appear to him required to be performed; and anything done by him when acting in accordance with his appointment shall have the same validity and effect as if done by a judge of that Court, and in respect thereof he shall have the same powers and enjoy the same immunities as if he had been a judge of that Court.

(2) The provisions of Clauses (2) and (5) of Article 124 shall apply to a judicial commissioner as they apply to a judge of a High Court.

[16] In view of the fact that the 1994 Amendments were made without the concurrence of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri, counsel for the plaintiff submits that there has been non-compliance with art 161E(2) and hence they are unconstitutional and invalid.

[17] Counsel for the defendant however submits that no such consents are required as the 1994 Amendments did not affect the operation of the Federal Constitution as regards the constitution and jurisdiction of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak, hence there is no contravention of art 161E(2). To recap, art 161E(2) prohibits amendments to the Federal Constitution without the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri 'if the amendment is such as to affect the operation of the (Federal) Constitution as regard the constitution and jurisdiction of High Court of Sabah and Sarawak'. The court is now tasked with the interpretation of two words in art 161E(2) and they are 'operation' and 'constitution'.

[18] The '1994 Amendment' in my mind had no doubt 'affected the operation' of the Federal Constitution as it had removed the power of appointment of judicial commissioners to the High Court by the Yang di-Pertua Negeri. As for whether this 'operation' is in regard to the 'constitution' of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak, the word 'constitution' as defined by Dictionary.com is as follows:

— noun

(1) the way in which a thing is composed or made up; makeup; composition: the chemical constitution of the cleanser.

(2) the physical character of the body as to strength, health, etc.: He has a strong constitution.

(3) Medicine/Medical, Psychology. The aggregate of a person's physical and psychological characteristics.

(4) the act or process of constituting: establishment.

(5) the state of being constituted; formation.

(6) any established arrangement or custom.

(7) (initial capital letter) Constitution of the United States.

(8) the system of fundamental principles according to which a nation, state, corporation, or the like, is governed.

(9) the document embodying these principles.

(10) Archaic. character or condition of mind; disposition; temperament.

[19] From that definition, it can be said in so far as what is relevant to the issue at hand, the word 'constitution' refers to 'existence' or the 'made up or structure' of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak. I have no issue to the contention that the 1994 Amendment did not affect the existence of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak. As for the 'make up' of the High Court of Sabah and Sarawak, it must involve the judicial officers presiding or manning in the courts in Sabah and Sarawak. They so to speak are the 'make up' or part of the structure of the court. A judicial commissioner is a judicial officer of the court and in my view as plain as daylight, constitute part of the structure of the court. Hence when the 1994 Amendment was introduced without the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri, it contravened art 161E(2)(b).

[20] The same conclusion can be reached by looking into the historical background to the Federal Constitution. The starting point is the report of the Inter-Government Committee 1962 ('IGC') and the Malaysia agreement dated 8 July 1963. The former document contains the terms and conditions in which Sabah and Sarawak agreed to form Malaysia and this is reflected in article VIII of the Malaysia agreement which states as follows:

> The Governments of the Federation of Malaya, North Borneo and Sarawak will take such legislative, executive or other actions as may be required to implement the assurances, undertakings and recommendations contained in Chapter 3 of, and Annexes A and B, the Report of the Inter-Governmental Committee signed on 27th February 1963, in so far as they are not implemented by express provision of the Constitution of Malaysia.

[21] In so far as this case is concerned, the relevant section is para 26(15) of Chapter 3 of IGC which states as follows:

> The Federal Constitution should contain provision enabling Judicial Commissioners to be appointed in the Borneo States on the lines of the existing s 10(i)(b) of the Sarawak, North Borneo and Brunei (Courts) Order in Council subject to the following two modifications:
> (a) there should be two methods for the appointment of Judicial Commissioners —
> (i) by the Yang di-Pertua Agong on the advice of the Chief Justice of Malaysia; and

(ii) by the Head of State of North Borneo or Sarawak on the advice of the Chief Justice of the High Court; and

(b) Judicial Commissioners should be appointed only from among persons qualified under Section 4(1) of the Advocates Ordinances of North Borneo and Sarawak to practice as advocates before the High Court.

[22] This recommendation was entrenched in the repealed art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution. Hence it can be said that the 1994 Amendments had contravened the IGC report which for all intent and purpose set out the rights of Sabah and Sarawak in the formation of Malaysia. These rights are protected rights and its protection lies in the consent of the respective states through the consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri. Thus it can be inferred that the repealed art 122A(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution (which is para 26(15) of Chapter 3 of IGC) can only be repealed with the consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak. The sanctity of the IGC report and the Malaysia agreement has been upheld by two decisions of the apex court in Pihak Berkuasa Negeri Sabah v Sugumar Balakrishnan [2002] 3 MLJ 72 and Datuk Hj Mohammad Tufail bin Mahmud & Ors v Dato Ting Check Sii [2009] 4 MLJ 165; [2009] 4 CLJ 449. In Sugumar's case, one of the issues for consideration by the Federal Court was whether the amendment to s 65(1)(c) of the Immigration Act contravened the Agreement Relating to Malaysia 1963 and IGC Report 1962 and Mohd Dzaiddin FCJ held:

> We are of the view that the spirit and intention of the Agreement Relating to Malaysia 1963 and the Report of the Inter-Governmental Committee had not been contravened.

[23] In Datuk Hj Mohammad Tufail bin Mahmud's case, a five member bench of the Federal Court through the Chief Justice of Malaysia remarked as follows:

[14] Safeguards and assurances provided to Sarawak (in this case, lawyers) were critical and pivotal to secure the participation of Sarawak in the formation of Malaysia.

[15] The Cobbold Commission was created to ascertain the views of the people of the Borneo States. The report showed that the people had fears of substitution of one colonisation with another; fear of being taken over by the then Federation of Malaya; fears of the submersion of the individualities of North Borneo and Sarawak within the then Federation of Malaya.

[16] The Cobbold Commission unanimously agreed that the formation of the Federation of Malaysia is in the best interest of North Borneo and Sarawak.

[17] These fears were ultimately addressed by the formation of the Inter-Governmental Committee ('IGC') on which the British, Malaya (now properly known as Semenanjung Malaysia), North Borneo and Sarawak

Governments were represented. Its task was to work out the future constitutional arrangements, including safeguards for the special interests of North Borneo and Sarawak relying on the Cobbold Commission Report. The relevant paragraphs being paras 3, 6 and 76 of the IGC Report 1962.

[18] Following the IGC Report, the Malaysia agreement was concluded between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Federation of Malaya, North Borneo, Sarawak and Singapore and signed on 9 July 1963. By the Malaysia agreement, Malaysia came into being on 16 September 1963.

[19] Article VIII of the Malaysia agreement provides that the Government of the Federation of Malaya, North Borneo and Sarawak will take such legislative, executive or other action as maybe required to implement the assurances, undertakings and recommendations contained in, inter alia, Annexes A and B to the IGC Report, in so far as they are not implemented by express provision of the Constitution of Malaysia.

[20] It was submitted that the right to practice law, can be seen in one of the safeguards contained in Annexure A to the Inter-Governmental Commission Report. Paragraph 4 of Annexure A is about civil and criminal law and procedure and the administration of justice. Paragraph 4(d) ('the 4(d) safeguard'), which is the relevant part, reads as follows:

> 4(d): Persons entitled to practise before such courts; restrictions on the lines of the existing Borneo legislation should be continued, so that practice at the local bar would, subject to certain exceptions provided for in that legislation, be restricted to resident advocates, until otherwise agreed by the Borneo State Legislatures.

[21] By the 4(d) safeguard, it was agreed that after formation of Malaysia, the exclusive rights of the Sarawak Bar to practise in respect of all Sarawak matter (ie, all matters in or arising in Sarawak) as stated in s 8 of Advocates Ordinance before Malaysia day would continue.

[22] Even before the formation of Malaysia, the Sarawak Bar, under the Advocates Ordinance of Sarawak, had the exclusive right to:

(i) practice in Sarawak;

(ii) appear and plead in the Supreme Court; and

(iii) appear and plead in all subordinate courts in Sarawak.

[23] It must be noted that without such recommendations in the IGC, Cobbold Commission and the Malaysia agreement, there may not be a Malaysia. These recommendations were not intended to and did not take away any of the Sarawak Bar's exclusive right. In fact, the rights were entrenched as a safeguard and were further extended so as to cover the right of audience before the new Federal Court.

[24] From these pronouncements, it is clear that the apex court in Malaysia has treated the Malaysia agreement and the recommendations of the IGC Report as a binding agreement which should not be contravened without the consent of the two states.

[25] It is not insignificant that the counsel for the defendant had informed the court that the consent of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak was obtained pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when amendment was made to art 121(1) of the Federal Constitution in 1988.

[26] Accordingly it is my view that the 1994 Amendment is invalid and therefore is null and void in so far as it concerns the removal of the power to appoint judicial commissioners by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak.

Issue 4

Whether the enactment of the Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 (Act 695) which came into force on 2 February 2009 is unconstitutional, null and void on the grounds that:

(a) it departs from the constitutional procedure and mode of appointment of judicial Commissioners and judges set out in arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution and in effect it would be the substitute for the present consultative process between the Prime Minister and the individual judges under the said articles;

(b) it is in effect an amendment of arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution and enacted in contravention of art 159(3) of the Federal Constitution;

(c) there was no concurrences of the Yang di-Pertua Negara of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution; and

(d) s 37 of Act 695 was enacted in contravention of art 44 of the Federal Constitution.

[27] The Judicial Appointments Commission Act 2009 ('JAC Act') came into force on 2 February 2009. Through the JAC Act 2009, a Judicial Appointments Commission (JAC) was established mainly to make recommendation to the Prime Minister on the candidates to be appointed as judicial commissioners or judges or on the promotion of sitting judges to the higher courts. The relevant provisions for the purpose of this suit are as set out below. Section 5 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

Constitution of the Commission

(1) The Commission shall consist of the following members

(a) the Chief Justice of the Federal Court who shall be the Chairman;

(b) the President of the Court of Appeal;

(c) the Chief Judge of the High Court in Malaya;

(d) the Chief Judge of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak;

(e) a Federal Court judge to be appointed by the Prime Minister; and

(f) four eminent persons, who are not members of the executive or other public service, appointed by the Prime Minister after consulting the Bar Council of Malaysia, the Sabah Law Association, the Advocates Association of Sarawak, the Attorney General of the Federation, the Attorney General of a State legal service or any other relevant bodies.

(2) The appointment of members of the Commission and the duration of the appointment shall be published in the Gazette.

[28] Section 21 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

Functions and powers of the Commission

(1) The functions of the Commission are —

(a) to select suitably qualified persons who merit appointment as judges of the superior court for the Prime Minister's consideration;

(b) to receive applications from qualified persons for the selection of judges of the superior court;

(c) to formulate and implement mechanisms for the selection and appointment of judges of the superior court;

(d) to review and recommend programmes to the Prime Minister to improve the administration of justice;

(e) to make other recommendations about the judiciary; and

(f) to do such other things as it deems fit to enable it to perform its functions effectively or which are incidental to the performance of its functions under this Act.

(2) The Commission shall have all such other powers as may be necessary for, or in connection with, or reasonably incidental to, the performance of its functions under this Act.

[29] Section 22 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

Selection process

(1) On receiving a request, the Commission must notify the members of the Commission and prepare for a selection meeting.

(2) In a selection meeting, the Commission shall apply the selection process as prescribed by regulations made under this Act and —

(a) select not less than three persons for each vacancy in the High Court; or

(b) select not less than two persons for each vacancy where the vacancy is for judges of the superior courts other than the High Court.

[30] Section 23 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

Selection criteria

(1) A candidate is qualified for selection if he fulfills the requirement under Article 123 of the Federal Constitution.

(2) The Commission in selecting candidates shall take into account amongst others, the following criteria:

(a) integrity, competency and experience;

(b) objective, impartial, fair and good moral character;

(c) decisiveness, ability to make timely judgments and good legal writing skills;

(d) industriousness and ability to manage cases well; and physical and mental health.

(3) A person who is a serving judge or judicial commissioner must not be appointed if he has three or more pending judgments or unwritten grounds of judgments that are overdue by sixty days or more from the date they are deemed to be due.

(4) The Commission in selecting candidates must also take into account the need to encourage diversity in the range of legal expertise and knowledge in the judiciary.

[31] Section 26 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

Report on recommendation

(1) After making its selection, the Commission shall submit to the Prime Minister a report which shall —

(a) state who has been selected by the Commission to be recommended for the appointment to the office concerned;

(b) state the reasons for such selection; and

(c) contain any other information the Commission deems necessary to bring to the knowledge of the Prime Minister.

(2) After submitting the report, the Commission shall provide any further information as may be required by the Prime Minister.

[32] Section 27 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

> The Prime Minister may, after receiving the report under section 26, request for two or more names to be selected and recommended for his consideration with respect to any vacancy to the office of the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, the President of the Court of Appeal, the Chief Judge of the High Court in Malaya, the Chief Judge of the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak, judges of the Federal Court and the Court of Appeal, and the Commission shall, as soon as may be practicable, comply with the request in accordance with the selection process as prescribed in the regulations made under this Act.

[33] Section 28 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

> Where the Prime Minister has accepted any of the persons recommended by the Commission, he may proceed to tender his advice in accordance with Article 122B of the Federal Constitution.

[34] Section 37 of the JAC Act 2009 provides:

> 37 Prevention of difficulties or anomalies
> (1) The Prime Minister may, whenever it appears to him necessary or expedient to do so, whether for the purpose of removing difficulties or preventing anomalies in consequence of the enactment of this Act, by order published in the Gazette make such modifications to any provisions of this Act as he thinks fit.
> (2) The Prime Minister shall not exercise the powers conferred by this section after the expiration of two years from the date of coming into operation of this Act.
> (3) In this section, 'modifications' includes amendments, additions, deletions, substitutions, adaptations, variations, alteration and non-application of any provisions of this Act.

[35] The plaintiff's submission is this. The JAC Act had in fact amended the manner in which judges are appointed to the courts in Malaysia as provided by arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution which dictates that the Prime Minister 'shall consult' the Chief Justice, President of Court of Appeal, Chief Judge of Malaya and Chief Judge of Sabah and Sarawak (relevant judges) before advice is given to the rulers for appointment of judges to the High Court, Court of Appeal and Federal Court. Counsel for the plaintiff further submits that since the JAC Act did not have the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak, it contravenes art 161E of the Federal Constitution. On those grounds, the JAC Act is unconstitutional and hence null and void.

[36] For the defendant, its submission in the words of counsel is this:

> 6.2 This selection process takes place before the appointment process set out in Articles 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution. That being the case, Act 695 has no impact on the appointment of Judges and JCs and is therefore not inconsistent with the said Articles in the Federal Constitution.
> 6.3 By the same token, the procedure laid down in Act 695 does not tantamount to a constitutional amendment. By no stretch of imagination can a process which is not even prescribed in the Constitution be construed as a constitutional amendment.

[37] For convenience I set out arts 122AB and 122B:

> 122AB Appointment of judicial commissioner
> (1) For the despatch of business of the High Court in Malaya and the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak, the Yang di-Pertuan Agong acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, after consulting the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, may by order appoint to be judicial commissioner for such period or such purpose as may be specified in the order any person qualified for appointment as a judge of a High Court; and the person so appointed shall have power to perform such functions of a judge of the High Court as appear to him to require to be performed; and anything done by him when acting in accordance with his appointment shall have the same validity and effect as if done by a judge of that Court, and in respect thereof he shall have the same powers and enjoy the same immunities as if he had been a judge of that Court.
> (2) The provisions of Clauses (2) and (5) of Article 124 shall apply to a judicial commissioner as they apply to a judge of a High Court.
> 122B Appointment of judges of Federal Court, Court of Appeal and of High Courts
> (1) The Chief Justice of the Federal Court, the President of the Court of Appeal and the Chief Judges of the High Courts and (subject to Article 122C) the other judges of the Federal Court, of the Court of Appeal and of the High Courts shall be appointed by the Yang di-Pertuan Agong, acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, after consulting the Conference of Rulers.
> (2) Before tendering his advice as to the appointment under Clause (1) of a judge other than the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, the Prime Minister shall consult the Chief Justice.
> (3) Before tendering his advice as to the appointment under Clause (1) of the Chief Judge of a High Court, the Prime Minister shall consult the Chief Judge of each of the High Courts and, if the appointment is to the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak, the Chief Minister of each of the States of Sabah and Sarawak.
> (4) Before tendering his advice as to the appointment under Clause (1) of a judge other than the Chief Justice, President or a Chief Judge, the Prime Minister shall consult, if the appointment is to the Federal Court, the Chief Justice of the Federal Court, if the appointment is to the Court of Appeal, the President of the Court of Appeal and, if the appointment is to one of the High Courts, the Chief Judge of that Court.

(5) This Article shall apply to the designation of a person to sit as judge of a High Court under Clause (2) of Article 122AA as it applies to the appointment of a judge of that court other than the Chief Judge.

(6) Notwithstanding the dates of their respective appointments as judges of the Federal Court, of the Court of Appeal or of the High Courts, the Yang di-Pertuan Agong, acting on the advice of the Prime Minister given after consulting the Chief Justice, may determine the order of precedence of the judges among themselves.

[38] The JAC Act, I agree with counsel for the defendant, merely provides a process in which candidates for judgeship are vetted by the JAC. As stated in the explanatory statement to the JAC Bill 2008, it seeks:

> ... to improve the process of appointment of judges under the Federal Constitution. This Bill will complement the existing provisions of the Federal Constitution, making the process more collective and transparent whilst preserving the Prime Minister's prerogative in judicial appointments.

[39] It is patently clear that the Federal Constitution does not provide any process in which the credentials of the candidates for judgeship are discussed before their names are presented to the Prime Minister for consideration. Neither is there any guideline provided for in the Federal Constitution to determine which candidates for judgeship are qualified to be appointed. The JAC Act attempts to rectify those shortfalls and it can be said that the JAC Act is a welcome piece of legislation. Be that as it may, it must not be a 'backdoor' legislation to circumvent the Federal Constitution as that would be unconstitutional.

[40] Having read the relevant provisions set out above, one thing is clear and that is all JAC do in their function is to recommend to the Prime Minister qualified candidates for judgeship and such recommendations remain as 'recommendations' only in that the Prime Minister's discretion is completely untouched which is as provided in arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution. However, there is no provision in the JAC Act as to when this process of selecting suitable candidates is to occur. Is it before or after the consultation with the relevant judges? Articles 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution provides that 'the Prime Minister shall consult' the relevant judges before he advises the Yang di-Pertuan Agong for any appointment of judges. This duty to consult is a constitutional duty and it can only be taken away by an express amendment to the Federal Constitution ie by votes of two third of members of Parliament. Of course there was no such constitutional amendment and hence the JAC Act must be read subject to that constitutional duty to consult. What this means is set out in B Surinder Singh Kanda v The Government of the Federation of Malaya [1962] MLJ 169, where Lord Denning when delivering the advice of the board said:

> In a conflict of this kind between the existing law and the Constitution, the Constitution must prevail. The Court must apply the existing law with such modifications as may be necessary to bring it into accord with the Constitution.

[41] A similar approach can be seen in State of Bihar and others v Bihar Distillery Limited AIR 1997 SC 1511where Jeevan Reddy J said:

> The approach of the court, while examining the challenge to the constitutionality of an enactment, is to start with the presumption of constitutionality. The court should to try to sustain its validity to the extent possible. It should strike down the enactment only when it is not possible to sustain it.

[42] In Kerajaan Negeri Selangor & Ors v Sagong Tasi & Ors [2005] 6 MLJ 289; [2005] 4 CLJ 169, the court was faced with a piece of state legislation which gave the state government a discretion whether or not to pay compensation for acquisition of landed property which is inconsistent with art 13 of the Federal Constitution. This is how Gopal Sri Ram JCA (as he then was) resolved the inconsistency:

> The way in which s 12 is to be brought into conformity with the Constitution is to make it yield to art 13(2) which reads:
> 13(2) No law shall provide for compulsory acquisition or use of property without adequate compensation.
> That is achieved by not reading the words 'the State Authority may grant compensation therefor' as conferring a discretion on the state authority whether to grant compensation or not. For otherwise it would render s 12 of the 1954 Act violative of art 13(2) and void because it will be a law that provides for the compulsory acquisition of property without adequate compensation. A statute which confers a discretion on an acquiring authority whether to pay compensation or not enables that authority not to pay any compensation. It is therefore a law that does not provide for the payment of adequate compensation and that is why s 12 will he unconstitutional.

[43] Reverting back to the case at hand and applying the approach set out above, the JAC Act must be read subject to the constitutional duty to consult. In another word, the recommendations of the Judicial Commission are subjected to the Prime Minister's duty to consult the relevant judges.

[44] Accordingly s 28 of the JAC Act 2009 should not be read as if there is no requirement for the Prime Minister of the day to consult the relevant judges before he tenders his advice in accordance with arts 122AB and 122B of the Federal Constitution and to read otherwise would make s 28 ultra vires the Federal Constitution.

[45] Lastly as for s 37 of the JAC Act, whichever way one reads it; it gives the power of the Prime Minister to amend any provisions of the JAC Act by way of a Gazette. Any amendment to the JAC Act or for that matter any legislation is an exercise of legislative power. The doctrine of separation of powers embodied in the Federal Constitution dictates that only the Parliament can make or amend laws. Accordingly I am left with no option but to hold that s 37 of the JAC Act null and void as it contravenes the Federal Constitution. This finding is now of course academic as this provision has a sunset clause of two years and the sun has since set on 9 February 2011.

ORDERS OF THE COURT

[46] For all the reasons stated above, I make the following declarations:

(a) art 122AB of the Federal Constitution is null and void in so far as the appointment of judicial commissioners by the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak is concerned; and

(b) s 37 of the Judicial Appointments Commission Act is null and void, and order that:

(a) the plaintiff's claim that the Judicial Appointments Commission Act (except for s 37) is unconstitutional be dismissed.

[47] As for costs, I make no order as this case is a public interest litigation. Order accordingly.

SUPPLEMENTARY JUDGMENT

[48] This judgment is supplemental to the grounds I gave on 14 March 2011. The remaining issue for determination is issue 2 which is this: Whether the concurrence of the Yang di-Pertua Negeri of each of the six States of Sabah and Sarawak is required pursuant to art 161E(2)(b) of the Federal Constitution when art 121(1) of the Federal Constitution was amended with effect from 10 June 1988?

[49] During submissions, counsel for the plaintiff agreed that if proof of the consent of the respective Yang di-Pertua Negeri of Sabah and Sarawak are shown to the court, he will not pursue this issue. The defendant did show such proofs yesterday and they are these:
